Celebration a Grand Success

A Large Crowd and Splendid Entertatnment Mark the 18th Celebration of Old Settlers Day

The 18th annual celebration of Old Settler's Day in Campbell has come and gone, and while it may not have been the best of any, it was certainly one ot the best. The weather was ideal and an immense crowd was present.

In the morning the exercises at the cannery were well attended. The large wareroom had been nicely decorated for the occasion with palms and American flags. The opening number, a solo by Dr. Blanchard, was well received. Rev. Geo. E. Atkinson gave the invocation. Rev. J. F. Wilson, chairman of the day, addressed the audience on "The Old Settler and the New Settler." Mrs. Dwight V. Ross, in a piano solo, so pleased the audience that she was called back for a second number.

Rev. Wm. Rader, speaker of the day, gave an eloquent and instructive address on the subject "Our Country." Rev. Rader is an intensely interesting speaker and held his audience at attention throughout his entire address.

A vocal solo by Mr. Bernhardt made a decided hit with the crowd.

During the noon hour a basket lunch was held in one of the large rooms of the cannery.

At 1:30 the wareroom was packed to hear the Stanford Glee Club, there being fully 1000 people in attendance. The numbers presented by these young men, everyone of whom is an artist in his line, were all good and were greatly appreciated by the audience.

The athletic program at the High School grounds also drew a large crowd. In the baseball game the High School boys, after a hard tussel, managed to win from the Alumni by a score of 12 to 10.

In the basket ball game the Alumni defeated the High School boys to the tune of 31 to 16.

The presentation of the mission bell to the city of Campbell by the ladies of the Pundita Circle took place at the close of the afternoon exercises at the cannery. The crowd went to the High School grounds where the ceremony was held. Mrs. Ringe, president of the Circle, presided. Mrs. Savage made the presentation speech and Rev. Wilson accepted in behalf of the Improvement Club. Short addresses were made by Prof. Smith, Rev. Atkinson and Rev. Rader. Mrs. A. P. Merrill read a poem entitled "Mission Bell and the Mission Fathers."

A fitting climax to a day already replete with good things, was the evening's musical at the M. E. Church, given under the auspices of the church choir. Splendid talent had been secured and the audience was so well pleased that each number was accorded an encore. The choir are to be commended for giving the people of Campbell such a treat.

The Ada Rebekah Lodge gave a dance in the Odd Fellow's Hall in the evening. A fine time is reported.

Improvement Club Holds Meeting

The Cambell Improvement Club held its regular meeting Friday night, with Vice President Waite in the chair and Chas. Berry Secretary pro tem.

W. C. Bogan, the special committee on Good Roads reported that he had interviewed the Board of Supervisors and found that there would be no money to devote to the roads in this vicinity. Through the intercession of himself and others in his section, Latimer avenue had been partially graveled and rolled, his impression was that the Board would do little more this season. In his investigations he found that there was a disposition on the part of the Board to call for a bond issue next year for $3,000,000 to establish a permanent Road Fund for the county, which added to the regular annual tax, would put this county in shape for the travel of 1915. As a matter of private opinion he thought the present method should be changed in handling road matters.

The Improvement Committee, through Messrs. Rodeck and Lantz, reported that they had nearly finished the canvass of the town in placing numbers, and out of 225 places that should have numbers, they had put up 180. Two parties only had refused to have the numbers posted.

Chas. Berry from the Committee on Park reported that the contemplated improvements to the park were completed, and the money for improvements was duly voted by the club.

Vice President Waite, from the Committee on Order of Business reported that the order had been duly drawn up by herself and J. F. Duncan but that through some oversight the report was not present, and the committee was given further time.

E. G. Lantz from the Committee on Street Beautification said that he had interviewed the larger number of the residents living along the portion of the ave. East of the bridge and that Messers Robson, Merrill, Pope, Griffin and Seagrin had promised to put the ground in a first class shape for planting flowers along the street.

On motion it was ordered that each member present try to bring at least two citizens with him at the next regular meeting.

Birthday Surprise Party

A Surprise party was tendered Andrew Huntley at his home on Hazel avenue last Monday evening, it being in honor of his 18th birthday. The following were present: Mr. and Mrs. Permort, Mr. and Mrs. Buxton, Walter Buxton, Ora Buxton, Lelia and Irene Granstrom, Mr. and Mrs. Snackenburg and Grandpa Snackenburg, Mr. and Mrs. Rich and daughters Esae, Laura and Zelma, Clara and Elva Pope, Florence Harris, Frank and Ira Harris, Mrs. Black and children, Lawson Richmond. The evening was pleasantly spent with games and other amusements. Refreshments were served, and at a late hour all departed for home declaring that they had spent a delightful evening.

HORSES AT CHRISTMAS TIME

Animals Should Receive Moderate Exercise and Be Fed According to Work Performed by Them.

(By HUGO KRAUSE, Secretary Anti-Cruelty Society of Chicago.)

Team owners and those who have the care and custody of horses will do well to remember that their animals should receive moderate exercise when their work is suspended for a few days, and should not be fed as heavily as ordinarily at such times.

Every year immediately after the Christmas holidays, scores of horses are seized with paralysis of the hindquarters, technically called azoturia and commonly but wrongly spoken of as spinal meningitis. This is the direct result of violating the above rule. On the day following a series of holidays anti-cruelty societies are usually overcrowded with efforts to relieve fallen horses, traffic is interfered with, and thousands of dollars are lost to the owners, to say nothing of the suffering that is thoughtlessly inflicted upon the dumb animals.

At such times the ambulance service of the city is not adequate to respond to all the calls that are made upon it, and the longer an animal lies in the street the less are its chances of recovery. Azoturia is caused by heavy feeding and lack of exercise, which brings about a surcharge of haemoglobin in the blood. The nerve centers become affected and paralysis results.

Most troubles of this kind can be prevented easily by a little precaution, but, singularly enough, every year finds a large number of small team owners who go through the bitter experience of losing a valuable animal simply because they or their employes are negligent in this regard. During the present year there will be a number of holidays in succession, and there is added reason for giving this warning note.

In cases where a horse is seized with azoturia, applications of warm material should at once be given to the loins and a dose of aloes or some other mild cathartic given internally while a veterinarian and the ambulance are awaited.

MAKING A GOOD DIRT ROAD

Many "Don'ts" Are Given by Expert on Maintenance of Highways—Make Center the Highest.

Don't fill up the holes and ruts in dirt road with brush, with rocks on top, and a little dirt to cover the rocks; but fill up the hole with dirt of the same character as the balance of the road, writes Joseph Hyde Pratt in the Progressive Farmer.

Don't throw all the refuse from the ditches into the middle of the road, thus softening the surface and destroying the solid, firm bed that you have obtained by previous work; but throw this material out on opposite side of the ditch.

Don't leave the center of the road the lowest point; but make it the highest and give the surface of the road a slope of about one inch in twenty to the side of the ditch.

Don't have grades on your road over 4 1-8 per cent.; for if you do, it will be necessary to build V-shaped surface ditches or "thank-you-mam's" across the road.

Don't in working out the labor tax on the roads, try to make a holiday out of it; but give an honest day's work on the road. Let us eliminate what is often seen in those sections where the roads are maintained by the labor tax—ten or twelve men and an overseer, a little gray mule, a small plow, six dogs, three or four guns, and a few tools which often are not considered worth using at home.

Don't reject the split-log drag because it is a cheap road machine, but use it constantly, for it is the most efficient road machine that we can use in maintaining a dirt road.

Food for Ducks.

Nothing will make a more savory feed for the little ducks than to take a spade and spade up a small plot of ground in a damp place and allow them to gather the worms and insects that are turned up.

Marshy places along a stream furnish many beetles and shellfish and if the young ducks are allowed a run of a yard like that the cost of feeding them will be greatly reduced.

Ducks can be raised in almost any poultry yard, but in order to make them profitable they will require more care than the chickens, and the breeding is attended with more expense in a yard that is not supplied with running water than where it has such a convenience.

To Him Who Learns.

Perennial youth and health of mind and body is only for him whose mind is growing daily through the absorption of those thoughts that quicken every faculty and thrill every feeling with a sense of unlimited life.—Walter De Foe.

More Than That in Life.

It would be a bad day for humanity if a man's debt to his fellow-men should come to be calculated and paid solely in rates and taxes.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Balky Horse Blocks Cleveland Street

CLEVELAND.—An antiquated horse with a hang-dog, apologetic cast of countenance, a moth-eaten hide and the disposition of a Missouri mule, stopped on Cleveland's busiest street the other afternoon.

For twenty-five minutes the horse defied four of Chief Kohler's "finest," blocked traffic on the congested thoroughfare and kept a crowd of some 300 shippers, office boys, clerks, teamsters and chauffeurs in an uproar of merriment.

The horse was pulling a cart which to all appearances was as antiquated as himself. A little negro topped off the outfit. When the horse stopped the negro carefully laid away his stump of a whip, extracted "the makin's" from a place of concealment in a dilapidated coat and thoughtfully began to roll a cigarette.

Just fifty seconds from the moment the horse had decided to cease movement a mounted traffic regulator arrived.

"Get a move on that nag," he shouted to the negro.

"Do it yourself, sah," responded the erstwhile driver, complacently continuing to roll the "skag."

The spick and span officer vaulted from his mount, grabbed the bridle and gave it a jerk. Then he jerked again. Then he pulled. The horse regarded him with reproachful eyes, but it didn't move.

A bicycle patrolman, a cotton-gloved traffic cop, and then another, appeared within the next five minutes. Also a crowd gathered. The horse hung its head in a disinterested sort of way and the little negro puffed away in the same way.

The "finest" reddened under the jeers and shouted suggestions from the office boys and teamsters, and finally gave it up.

"Ah might unhitch that there hoss and lead 'im away," suggested the little negro thoughtfully.

"I's 'gainst the rules to unhitch on a congested street," responded an officer curtly, "you've got to drive him."

"A'm powerfully sorry, boss, but Ah jus' naturally can't do that," said the little negro, and started to roll another cigarette.

Traffic had congested until it threatened to block Euclid avenue also. Then the officers admitted defeat. The little negro unhitched, the officers, aided by volunteers, backed the wagon into an alley, and the horse ambled dejectedly along.

City Schools to Be Social Centers

CHICAGO.—Thirteen public school buildings will be opened in Chicago soon as neighborhood social centers. For the first time in its history the Chicago board of education will offer to persons not of common school age some of the benefits that the presence of school buildings may bring to a neighborhood. This decision was reached at a recent meeting of the board's committee on social centers.

To help the people get their money's worth out of expensive eqquipment used only a few hours out of the day is the object of the innovation. At variance with persons who would have the use of school property and resources restricted entirely to educational purposes, the committee of the board intends to maintain places of evening recreation wherever the people of a neighborhood accept the opportunities offered to them.

"Our idea in opening these social centers," said Dean Sumner, in explaining the new policy, "is to learn if there is a demand for the use of schools by adults. If there is such a demand or if we can create it, we shall develop the centers into evening meeting places for parents' clubs, for social organizations and for civic debating societies, all under the direction of the principal of the center, who is also the principal of the school.

"Last year we conducted ten school buildings as centers for children.

"Each of the centers for the children was provided with a principal and six teachers. Parents came in swarms with their children and so they really made use of the buildings as social centers for adults before the privileges were formally given to them.

"For the children we shall continue the privilege of recreation in the old schools and in those added this year. In the same buildings the older people will be urged to form social clubs, hear lectures, attend dramatics, join in advanced gymnasium work and hear and participate in debates."

Gets Rich Selling Candy on Streets

NEW YORK.—The wind-swept corner at Broadway and Fulton street is soon to lose one of its two old outdoor merchants. Phil Roman, the rubber stamp man, contemplates a future of solitude, and the sparrows in St. Paul's churchyard one of hunger, for Adam Schmalzer, friend and mentor to Phil and chief provider to the sparrows, is going to retire.

Profits accruing from the sales of a million penny sticks of candy have made Adam financially independent after thirty years, and he has realized it suddenly. Phil will tell you, with a look in his eyes that belies his words, that he is "glad old Adam has got some sense at last—oughter retired long ago."

Adam has not been "old Adam" to Phil very long. When he came to the corner in 1881 the rubber stamp man called him the "kid," for Phil then had been doing business at the old stand for something like twelve years. Adam wasn't at the corner when a reporter went to see him the other day. Phil was standing guard over both stands.

"Yes," he admitted, "Adam, he's going to quit. Thirty years I've seen him come and go. Six o'clock in the morning I'd see him come across Broadway lugging his candy case from the basement where he kept it.

"Guess there's more money in candy than there is in rubber stamps. Now Adam's to go, I'd quit, too, if I could afford it."

"My dad was the first man to sell lemonade on the streets of New York City. My grandfather was a sidewalk merchant, and a good one, too. Maybe I've been a little luckier than they. I've been able to give my girl and boy good educations and they are married now," old Adam said.

In the thirty years at the church corner Adam has missed just five days.

Take Revenge by Clipping Girl's Hair

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—Barbara Weaver, the 15-year-old girl who was shorn of her locks as she lay asleep, lost her crown of glory because she was "stuck up." It is strongly suspected that the vandals who snipped off one of her silken braids were two boys, former playmates of hers, who resented what they regarded as her growing tendency toward aristocracy.

Little Miss Weaver is the daughter of Claude Weaver, an attorney, who is considered wealthy. Barbara Weaver had been on friendly terms with the children in the neighborhood of the family home, but is said to have gained the idea of late that her social standing did not permit of her continuing such relations. Two of her cast-off friends are believed to have adopted the "rape of the lock" idea to express their resentment of these high-flown notions.

This theory is strengthened by the fact that Cynthia Powell, a girl of Barbara's age, who attended school with her, received a "Black Hand" letter recently, threatening her with dire things unless she continued to speak to two boys of the neighborhood who are under suspicion.

Miss Weaver's hair is a beautiful auburn and was long and silky. In preparing it for the night it was her practice to arrange it in two long braids. Miss Rosabell Teder sleeps in the same room with her, and discovered on awakening that one of the beautiful braids was missing. Hastily awakening her companion, they began a search and found the braid on the floor beside the bed. Miss Weaver's parents were aroused, and the police were notified. Later the other braid was cut off, so that Miss Weaver's hair now presents a Buster Brown effect.

MAN WOULDN'T BE FRIENDLY

Borrower of Money Couldn't Just Remember Whether He Had Returned It in Registered Letter.

Two years had elapsed. Then the man who had promised upon his honor that he would send back the $3 just as soon as he could find a job returned.

"Well," he asked, "what do you want?"

"Why, I happened to be passing this way, and I thought I'd run in and see you. You're lookin' fine."

"Thanks. By the way, I never got the $3 you were going to return to me as soon as you found a job."

"Didn't you? Why, I sent it."

"That's just like the government. It's always letting important letters get lost. Did you register it?"

"I don't just remember now. I guess I didn't."

"That was careless. You always ought to register letters in which you return borrowed money. Where did you send it from? Perhaps we can trace it, even if it wasn't registered."

"Why, I—let me see? I think it was from Cincinnati."

"Well, you hurry back to Cincinnati and start a tracer from that end and I'll see what I can do to have things stirred up here."

"Confound him!" said the borrower when he had reached the hall, "there's no use tryin' to be friendly with a man like that."

AN AGED EGG.

Mrs. Kidder—I wonder how Columbus made the egg stand on end?

Kidder—Easy. He shook it around until he had the chicken's feet in the big end of the egg, and then stood him on them.

Why He Sold Papers.

A small newsboy's loud, gay call halted a woman passing along the street of a western city, and, as she paid a penny for one of his papers, she asked:

"What do you pay for your papers?"

"I's on Sandy Jim's beat," he replied, "an' I pays a cent apiece."

"But if you don't make anything, why do you go about selling papers?"

"So I gets a chance," he answered, "to holler, an' go 'round with th' push."—Harper's.

Who Has?

Miss Scribble—The heroine of my next story is to be one of those modern advanced girls who have ideas of their own and don't want to get married.

The Colonel (politely)—Ah, indeed. I don't think I ever met that type.—Life.

Suggesting Improvements.

"Does your boy Josh take an interest in the farm?"

"He's beginnin' to," replied Mr. Corntossel. "He's been showin' me where we could have some dandy golf links an' how easy it would be to turn the barn into a garage."

Including the Wedding Fee.

Mrs. Chubb (with newspaper)—I see several persons are petitioning to have their names changed. What does it cost to have a name changed?

Mr. Chubb—It cost me a couple of hundred to have your name changed to mine.

All for Love.

Mr. A—Norah seems quite gone on the postman.

Mrs. A—Gone! Do you know what that girl does? She mails herself a postcard every evening so as to make sure he'll call the next morning.

An Iconoclast.

Passerby—What's the fuss in the school yard, boy?

The Boy—Why, the doctor has just been around examinin' us an' one of the deficient boys is kickin' the everlastin' stuffin' out of a perfect kid.

Same Old Qualifications.

"This," said the dealer, "is the best automobile you could buy; just the thing for a lady."

"Really?" remarked Miss Bright. "I suppose it's—er—kind and gentle and not afraid of trolley cars."—Catholic Standard and Times.

A Culinary Paradox.

"How so?"

Harmony.

"Miss Dibbs prides herself on her accuracy."

"I know she does. When her half-sister died she went into half-mourning."

Rummage and Romance

By M. DIBBELL

"Contributions for another rummage sale? Good gracious, Ella, do you think we have a complete new outfit of clothing every three months?" Mrs. Bond's voice sounded a trifle impatient.

"Remember it is for the good of the 'Cause,' Minerva, and think what a blessing it will be to the Long road people to get some warm things cheap—I am sure you haven't weeded out all the closets yet."

"What a fine collector you make." Mrs. Bond had regained her usual good nature. "Come in, and I will take a look around. I simply won't promise to get them down to you. You must take them with you if you want them."

"I shall be delighted," answered her friend. "It will do me good to sit down and meditate on the best way to approach my next victim." She seated herself in a rocker, while Mrs. Bond went on her search.

It was not long before she returned, her arms piled high with garments. Depositing them on the table she remarked:

"I found a treasure trove in Leslie's room. He told me some time ago that if I knew anybody who needed something warm to wear, he hoped I would bestow his extra sweaters and coats on them, but I had forgotten all about it till I saw them. He only went away day before yesterday."

"Oh, that is splendid!" Ella Valden cried. "They will be just the thing for some of the men who have very little left for clothes after the family is fed." She handled the articles almost caressingly, for she had a soft place in her heart for the hard working Long road men.

Mrs. Bond began to feel in the pockets of the coats. "Leslie is such a careless fellow," she explained. "It would be just like him to leave something valuable in an old coat pocket.

Seven handkerchiefs, a watch charm, also the chain to which the charm belonged, and a purse containing several dollars, rewarded her search. Last of all she drew from the outer pocket of a sack coat a letter, and her friend who was laughing over Leslie's pocket collection, was startled at the look which came into Mrs. Bond's face.

"What is the matter?" she queried in dismay.

"The matter is that Leslie's forgetfulness may have spoiled the rest of his life for him," gasped Mrs. Bond, and tears filled her eyes. "He has forgotten to mail the letter I wrote to Eva Herding. O, why didn't I tell him how much her receiving it might mean to him?"

"I shall tell you all about it," said Mrs. Bond when she could speak. "I must have advice from some one, and you always liked Leslie."

"Indeed I have," said Miss Valden warmly. "No one could help liking such a dear boy. I only wish I might help you somehow."

"You know that Eva and he have known each other all their lives, and we all hoped that some day she would come into the family. But last summer she seemed to change in her manner toward Leslie—he did not understand it at all, why she should treat him so coldly, when he had done nothing to offend her. He always came to me with his troubles, as well as his joys, and we were both puzzled. I advised him to ask her for an explanation, but when he did she insisted that there was nothing to explain, that they were simply good friends, and they always had been.

"Providentially, I found out the whole trouble—it doesn't seem possible that such things could happen. But some men seem to have no sense of humor when their so-called 'love' is concerned, and Jacob Hilbert is that kind of man. He wants Eva himself, and he told her that Leslie was making love to Ada Folwell, and apparently proved his statement by showing her a note purporting to be from Leslie to Ada. I don't know how he said he came in possession of the note, but he made Eva believe that he was telling the truth.

It was a dear friend of Eva's to whom she confided the whole wretched story under promise o fsecrecy, who came and told me. She did not believe that Leslie was double faced, and she hoped I might help matters somehow. I wrote Eva that I knew Leslie was true to her, and could prove it if she would come to me. I gave the note to Leslie to mail, and did not speak of it again. This morning I saw her drive past with Jacob Hilbert—she did not get my note, and I am sure she is going to marry him, perhaps today. O, what shall I do?" Mrs. Bond looked hopelessly at her friend.

Her surprise was intense when Ella valden asked calmly: "Where did Leslie go when he left you?"

"On one of his business trips for the firm. But what has that to do with—"

Her friend interrupted: "I think you are mistaken, Minerva, for brother John saw him over in Westville yesterday, leaving the minister's house, with Ada Folwell beside him, and the minister's wife came running to the door to throw a big handful of rice after them."

Mrs. Bond had no explanation to offer. She stared dumbly at her questioner.

"Perhaps I can straighten things out a little for you. Ella Valden's calm voicet went on, when she received no answer. "Eva has been going about with Jacob Hilbert a good deal during the last six months, and my own opinion is that she made up the story about Leslie as an excuse to her friend for treating him shabbily. Fortunately Leslie met Ada Folwell when she came to visit her aunt, and I think it was a case of love at first sight with both of them. Leslie, I know, would have considered himself bound to Eva. If she had not slighted him, but I have more than once thought that his feeling for her was only friendship, and I am glad for his sake that matters have turned out this way. I never told you some of the unpleasant things I knew about Eva's disposition, but now I will say that I think he has had a very lucky escape."

Mrs. Bond sighed. "How could you possibly know all this, when I never even guessed a word of it?" she asked wonderingly.

Ella Valden smiled. "Remember that Ada's aunt is my particular friend, and that Eva Harding is my next door neighbor, also that my eyesight is still good."

There was silence for a moment, broken by Mrs. Bond's remarking in much more cheerful tones: "I have only met Ada Folwell a few times, but I liked all I saw of her immensely; and though I would not acknowledge it even to myself, I have feared that Eva might not make Leslie happy. Wouldn't you have told me a word about all this if I hadn't found that letter and asked your advice?"

"Why should I have given information which Leslie would rather have you receive from himself? Now I must take your donation down to the sale, and start out after others."

"What Is the Matter?"

As Miss Valden was descending the steps with her big bundle of clothing, a carriage drove up to the gate. She called back to Mrs. Bond: "I think you are to receive a call from the newly married couple—tell me if I worked out the correct answer to Leslie's part of the puzzle."

It was Leslie and his bride.

"I know all about it," cried Mrs. Bond, as she kissed the blushing Ada. "You must tell me the story all over again, so I can be sure I have it right."

The next time Mrs. Bond met Ella Valden she said: "I think nature intended you for a great detective, Ella, for things had happened just as you thought they had—and Ada is a dear."

House Mother's Place.

A charming institution of German homes abroad is what is known as the hausmutter platz—"the housewife's place. In the choicest nook of the mother's special room—preferably under a window, and not too far from the stove—is built a small platform, sometimes railed, raised about two feet from the floor. Upon this platform spread with a comfortable rug, stand the mother's easy chair, work basket, footstool, or whatever else her occupation calls for; and here like a queen on her throne the mother peacefully sits at work while her little ones play securely about the room. In well regulated German households the house mother's place is held sacred, and an invitation to enter it is regarded by the child as a special privilege. But, aside from this, the pleasant and convenient hausmutter platz has much to recommend it to American mothers.—Good Housekeeping Magazine.

His Day of Doom.

The wealthy bachelor sat alone in his luxuriously furnished rooms.

Around him were signs of great wealth.

Nevertheless, he was unhappy.

Do not think 'twas because he was in love.

That isn't the point of the story at all.

He was impressed with a sense of impending doom. He could not fathom the how or why or what. He only felt the presentiment.

There he sat in the midst of his luxury, a picture of wretchedness, with his chin in his hands.

Suddenly there was a knock.

"Ah!" he muttered.

Striding to the door, he flung it open.

On the threshold stood a female book agent.

"Caught at last!" he murmured huskily, and sank into a swoon.

Life in the Cyclone Belt.

Since the excitement caused by the cyclone has somewhat subsided, some of the queer incidents of the storm are coming to light.

Arthur E. Langdon, two miles west of town, records among the other losses twenty-five thoroughbred Rhode Island Red chickens. The wind carried away the coop, and neither the chickens nor the coop can be found.

When the John Eddy home was demolished, among the house furnishings swept away was a parlor organ. This instrument was found yesterday in a field opposite where the house stood, and from all appearances had suffered no damage except what had resulted from standing out in the rain and snow.

The six-year-old daughter of Fred Kelley of Eaton Rapids township was riding home from town with her parents when the storm struck the carriage, tore it loose from the horse and pitched it bottom up against the wire fence by the roadside.

The "twister" picked the child off the ground, gave her a few dizzy whirls and tosed her into the top of an apple tree, where she clung to the branches until rescued by her father, the only injury inflicted being a severe fright.—Eaton Rapids Correspondence Detroit Free Press.

MOVED AUDIENCE TO TEARS

Frederick the Great of Prussia Was Said to Be a Wonderful Flute Player.

Abdul Hamid used to amuse himself while he was enjoying life at Vildiz Kiosk by strumming "Il Trovatore" on the piano, and perhaps that wonderful piece de resistance of our brass bands still makes life endurable in his Salonika villa.

George III. was fond of shouting the melodies of Handelian choruses for the delectation of his court, but the world has seen no real royal musician since Frederick the Great played his last tune on his flute, though of course even Frederick could stand no comparison with our own Henry VIII., who played remarkably well.

The centenary of the birth of Frederick, celebrated on January 24, has revived interest in the great man's Tityrean piping and a certain industrious Johannes Hennigsen has unearthed contemporary comments on his playing. It seems that the king excelled in adagio movement, into which he infused a warmth and tenderness of feeling that would hardly have been expected from the conqueror of Rossbach and the friend of Voltaire. "It is difficult to listen to his performances without weeping," says one musician.

One reason why he preferred adagios was that he was somewhat short of breath, which made him eschew orchestral accompaniments for the more delicate assistance of the clavichord when he was practicing.

Toward the end of the Seven Years war he sat down to play in a quartet, and at the finish cried enthusiastically: "It is as sweet as sugar!" His companions were not so sure, for Frederick had lost a tooth and his fingers had stiffened with gout. Final in 1778 he had to give up his flute playing and "I have lost my best friend," was the wail of the disconsolate monarch.—Le Journal des Debats.

San Francisco, Feb. 19.—Professor C. P. Zaner of Columbus, Ohio, who is recognized as one of the world's greatest penmen and business educators, recently visited some of the Heald Business Colleges. Mr. Zaner has visited nearly all of the best commercial schools of the country, and he says the Heald Schools are not surpassed in methods of instruction, equipment and general advantages to their students. These colleges are located at San Francisco, Oakland, Stockton, San Jose, Reno, Chico, Fresno, Santa Cruz, Los Angeles, Riverside and Long Beach.

"LONG TIME" IS DEFINED

Remark of Governor of North Carolina to Governor of South Carolina Brought Into Court.

The oft-quoted remark of the Governor of North Carolina to the Governor of South Carolina has at last been brought into court, carefully construed, and found not to be so long as some other times. It is probable that it was the exceeding droughtiness of the interval which made it seem long. In a prosecution for the illegal sale of whisky in Alabama, a witness testified that he had bought a pint of liquor of the accused "a short time" before the grand jury returned the indictment against him. It was objected that this evidence did not show that the prosecution had been begun within 12 months after the sale of the whisky, the time limited by statute for beginning a prosecution. In discussing this objection, the Supreme court, in Wilson versus State, 56 Southern Reporter, 114, after holding that "a short time" might be taken in the connection in which it was used to refer to a period less than 12 months, said, by way of illustration: "The expression 'a long time' would refer to a very different period of duration and have a widely different meaning in measuring time when used by an archaeologist having reference to the period of existence of the Egyptian pyramids, than when used by Carolina Governors with reference to the time between drinks." The court may be right, but probably the Governor of North Carolina measured time as recommended by the poet who said: "We live * * * in feelings, not in figures on the dial."—Colliers'.

Fair Offer.

It was a political meeting in the east end, and the M. P., an exceptionally popular man, was addressing his constituents. The politician in question rejoices in a luxuriant crop of hair. The audience was sympathetic for the most part; but there was one man in the front row of the audience who made numerous interruptions. He was a coal-heaver, apparently, and had but recently been heaving coals.

"Get your hair cut!" he shouted during a most pathetic passage in the candidate's speech. The well-known catch phrase seemed particularly applicable, so a good many of the audience laughed.

But the M. P. was equal to the occasion.

"I will make a bargain with that gentleman," he said. "I will get my hair cut if he will get his face washed."

There were no more interruptions.—London Tit-Bits.

Woman's Sense of Honor.

Much has been done by our own higher education and widening field of work, and a woman now despises what used to be by repute her most formidable weapons—a lie, tears and a skillful appeal to the vanity of man. The writer has often noticed the markedly greater breadth of view and the truer sense of honor among the present-day girl students compared with that which obtained when she herself was a student, and which is still largely that of women of her own age today. An even more striking fact is that the majority of men do not seem to expect as keen a sense of honor from women as they do from themselves. This mental atmosphere has surely a deterrent effect upon the growth of that sense.—A Woman Teacher, in London Spectator.

Valuable Newspaper Files.

In the library of congress are found the most valuable newspaper files in existed, so far as this country is concerned. Recently the government purchased the files of the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, the issues covering the period between 1786 and 1809, with the exception of five years. This is said to be one of the most important files yet obtained. The paper has been in the possession of an old book and junk man for over 40 years. He purchased them for $50, sold them for $1,000, and the buyer in turn got got $7,500 for them from the government

Wells and Strachey.

H. G. Wells, the noted English novelist, was being discussed at the Franklin Inn in Philadelphia.

"Wells is continually attacked by the Spectator," the editor said. "Saint Loe Strachey, the Spectator's editor, is a narrow-minded man, and he vilifies Wells much as Clement Scott used to vilify Ibsen.

"But Wells doesn't mind. One day at the National Liberal club he threw down a copy of the Spectator containing a scurrilous attack on him, and he said:

"'There are just two things that I always ardently wish to be sure of—the love of God and the hatred of Saint Loe Strachey.'"

A Sympathetic Pair.

A man wearing a yellow tie with scarlet dots was riding to town on a suburban train. As he rode he kept looking pityingly at a man across the aisle who wore a green tie with lavender stripes. Finally the man with the stripes said:

"You keep looking at me as though you thought I bought this tie. I wish to have you know this tie is not my taste at all. My sister gave it to me Christmas and I have to wear it. She lives next door to me."

"Wasn't thinking about your tie at all," said the man with dots. "My wife gave me mine."

The American Girl Without Training

"Can you tell me why we should not train our children? We train the puppy and the colt, in order that they may win prizes at the county fairs; we train the young sapling, that it may form a straight and vigorous tree, knowing that 'as the twig is bent the tree's inclined.' But when we reach the child, some one says: 'Hands off! Let nature mold him as she will. Do not interfere with her work. Do not encourage or repress natural instincts.' What is the result upon that finest and most beautiful creation, the American girl? She is well developed physically, plentifully furnished with brains, self poised, and independent. But mark the criticism passed upon her by strangers. The American girl is mannish. She is underbred. She is noisy, loud voiced, slangy. She is wholly lacking in reverence. The American girl has another trait which I sadly deplore. It is a boldness and familiarity toward the opposite sex which is indelicate, to say the least."—Margaret Woodward in Suburban Life Magazine.

DONT'S FOR POULTRYMEN

Don't allow your incubators to run over 104 degrees.

Don't fail to see that the wick is trimed and the lamp filled daily at a certain hour.

Don't open the machine while hatching.

Don't feed the little chickens until they are at least forty-eight hours old.

Don't forget to put a little salts in the drinking water the first two or three days.

Don't crowd the chicks. Over twenty-five chicks is too many in one coop.

Don't fail to clean your brooders and brood coops daily if you want clean, healthy fowls.

Don't use any but the best of grain for your fowls.

Don't forget the insects of various kinds; they are the poultryman's greatest enemy.

Don't allow a chicken to have a single drawback in maturing if you want a prize winner.

Don't forget about thoroughbreds. It costs no more to raise and keep them, and they will return five times more profit than mongrels. Be successful; raise good fowls.

Don't think that the poultry business is going to be overdone. It never will be.

Editors are Threatened

Country editors are threatened with an unknown danger. The women can vote and will of course aspire for office. That means cards, political cards, and new styles and tints must be forthcoming. The plain, serviceable old round cornered standby must give way to something new and whether they will be serrated, cut on the bias or simply lopped off remains to be seen. Of course spring and fall colors with ink to match is of minor importance. The best advice in the premises is to buy in small quantities for even the male candidates, in their desire to please, may emulate the fastidious dictates of fashion's decree.—Healdsburg Enterprise.

NOTICE TO DEBTORS AND CREDITORS

The general public is hereby notified that the newspaper known as the "Campbell Interurban Press" and the job printing business, with all other interests connected therewith, passed from the ownership of Dick & Chamberlin to Mr. Harry C. Smith on February 15th. All accounts due or payable previous to the 15th of February, 1912, excepting subscription accounts, are payable to Dick & Chamberlin. All subscription accounts whatsoever, and all accounts contracted on or after the 15th day of February, 1912, are liable to Mr. Harry C. Smith. Mr. L. C. Dick has charge of all affairs connected with Dick & Chamberlin, and Mr. A. B. Chamberlin will conduct the business of Harry C. Smith until further notice.

Everyone Interested

In Development of California. Low Rates From the East

The Southern Pacific have arranged to establish very low passenger rates from all Eastern points and European points to California points to be effective from March 1st to April 15th, 1912. From all Missouri River points the fare will be $25.00, from Chicago $33.00, from New York $50.00 and from all other points in proportion. If you have friends whom you are figuring on bringing to California now is your opportunity to do so at small cost. You may deposit the money with any Southern Pacific agent who will immediately make all arrangements, having tickets furnished and sleeping car reservations made, thus relieving you of the necessity and risk of sending money east.

If you desire rates from or to any point in the world, or any figuring on any trip, a line to Mr. E. Shillingsburg, District Passenger Agent at San Jose, will bring full information and rates, or if you desire, a representative of the company who is thoroughly versed in the ways of traveling will call on you and explain fully rates, routes, etc.

District Loses if Pupils Are Tardy

Every time a school child is tardy he costs the school district money; there is no longer any such thing as "tardiness" but "partial absence."

This is the gist of ruling made by Attorney General Webb's office for State Superintendent of Pudlic Instruction Hiatt in interpertation of the claus of the new law passed by the 1911 Legislature, fixing the average daily attendance of pupils as the basis upon which State funds are distributed to the school of each county. The unit of attendance hereafter is to be the quarter day. And in order to count, it must be a full unit, according to todays opinion. If a pupil is late, therefore, a quarter of the day must be counted off because he or she is "absent" part of the day.

The Question of Glasses

Are they needed or not?
The question is easily answered by those who can't see well without them, but for a great many who see well and still suffer from the effect of eye-strain it can only be decided after a careful examination. Such an examination I am prepared to give you, and an honest opinion as to what is needed. No operation. No drugs. No glasses unless necessary.
